

Random walk models and nonlinear fractional subdiffusive equations: applications in physics and biology

Sergei Fedotov

University of Manchester

The standard models for the description of anomalous subdiffusive transport of particles are linear fractional equations. The question arises as to how to extend these equations for the nonlinear case involving particles interactions. The talk will be concerned with the structural instability of fractional subdiffusive equations and nonlinear aggregation phenomenon.